Connecting Georgia Standards and 4-H Project Achievement through English Language Arts

4-H Project Achievement is a tool for enhancing the subject area of English Language Arts. This teaching tool encourages and fosters the development of both oral and written communication skills through project development.

The key components of 4-H Project Achievement are research, organization, summary, and expression. This teaching tool allow a student to explore an area of interest. Once the student has explored many various subject areas and selects a topic to research, knowledge gain begins. The student gathers materials based on his or her subject area and reads to gain understanding of the subject matter/area he or she has chosen. This material is absorbed and summarized by the student and organization of the ideas begins. This part of the learning process allows exposure to new vocabulary and reinforces reading comprehension skills.

Once knowledge and information is collected on the chosen subject the student is required to organize the information and generate a speech on the subject matter. Text generation includes the following steps: brainstorming about the subject, synthesizing the material into a jot list or graphic organizer, outlining the material so that key points can be communicated to the audience, and generating text to evolve into a speech that is informative and easily communicates and educates the audience on valuable information about the subject area.

In generating a speech for the public speaking component of the learning experience of 4-H Project Achievement, the student focuses on becoming familiar enough with the written text that he or she is able to share the information orally with others. The opportunity to speak publicly about the information researched and text generated provides a great opportunity to practice and solidify oral (speaking and listening) communication skills.
